SEC, and because concerns about the accuracy of Sylver's testimony were the basis in part of the imposition of the permanent Officer and Director bar, they were clearly "outcome determinative". Advanced Systems, Inc. v. Kent State University, 212 F.3d 1272, 1284 (Fed. Cir. 2000). Therefore, Sylver was effectively denied procedural and substantive "due process", i.e. a full and fair opportunity to present his defense.
"But if one can not say, with fair assurance, after pondering all that happened, without stripping erroneous action from the whole, that the judgment was not substantially swayed by the error, it is impossible to conclude that substantial rights were not affected."..... "If so, or if one is left in great doubt, the conviction can not stand". US. v. Lane, 474 438, 106 S. Ct. 725, 832, 833 (1986).

The right of a witness to refresh his recollection from documents whether or not they are admissible in evidence, though widely recognized is in need of clarification.

While the trial judge is granted wide discretion in the admissibility of evidence, it is not a free-for-all. Centuries of jurisprudence on the implications of the Fifth Amendment have clearly been designed to protect the right to a fair trial of the issues and ensure that no one is unfairly deprived of what can reasonably provide for his defense. Substantive Due Process requires this protection.

Documents need not be admitted or admissible in evidence in order to be used to refresh the recollection of a witness. United States of America v. Donald D. Faulkner, 538 F.2d 724, 1976 U.S. App. Lexis 8102. The law is well settled that a witness may refer to a writing to refresh his recollection. Town of Columbus v. Loren Robert Harrington, 2001 Mont 258, 307 Mont. 215, 36 P.3d 937. Barrer v. Women's National Bank, USDC, Dist Columbia, 96 F.R.D. 202, at 203, 204, 35 Fed. R. Serv. 2d 1052 (1982). James Julian, Inc. v. Raytheon Co., USDC, Dist. Del., 93 F.R.D. 138, at 144 (1982). Marshall v. United States Postal Service, USDC, Dist. Columbia, 88 F.R.D. 348, 30 Fed. R. Serv. 2d 1263 (1980). Jacobson v. Amtrak, USDC, ND IL., Eastern Div., 200 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20924, at 13, Note 1 (2000). Suss v. MSX Int'l. Eng'g. Svcs., USDC, SDNY, 212 F.R.D., 159 (2002). Annette Rush v. Illinois Central Railroad Company, 399 F.3d 705; 2005 U.S. App. LEXIS 3624; 2005 Fed App. 0106P (6th Cir. 2004).

Where an officer bar is involved which impinges on the livelihood, employability, reputation (i.e. the defendant having his name publicly displayed on the internet , etc.) it is all the more urgent that the Supreme Court craft protection of the most cherished values and rights of due process. While government regulatory bodies are mandated by Congress to certain tasks, they cannot become "supra-Constitutional entities" that need have no regard for constitutional protections of the ordinary citizen. In their zeal to make a showing of accomplishment, regulatory bodies such as the Securities and Exchange Commission cannot by allowed to encroach upon the fundamental rights of Due Process of Law.

Here the Supreme Court should grant this petition because it affords the court the opportunity to craft language which would prevent a Government plaintiff from abusing its superior position to entrap a defendant into potentially slipping under duress with respect to multitudinous details from four to seven years ago - all in the name of testing the credibility of the witness while giving the witness an impossible task.

This court could craft a rule which would providing that where key documents had been destroyed the ability of a defendant to refer the only documents available to refresh his memory is protected, not stripped away on a technicality. Such a rule could 1) protect against technical traps and assure that Fifth Amendment rights are inviolable, i.e. superior to judicial expediency, and 2) ensure trial courts protect the interests of truth and fair trial of the issues rather than yielding to misapplications of the Federal Rules of Evidence in a manner that obfuscates truth and violates the intent of due process.

This court ought to make clear that in such circumstances Due Process outweighs the trial court's discretion in order to safe guard the defendant's right to due process of law.

CONCLUSION

The writ of certiorari should be granted.

The Honorable Donald P. Lay, Senior United States Circuit Judge for he Eighth Circuit, sitting by designation.

Michael A. Sylver, the president and chief executive officer of Amazon Natural Treasures, Inc., appeals the order and judgment of the United States District Court for the District of Nevada. The district court imposed a permanent officer or director bar upon Sylver, ordered Sylver to disgorge a total of $232,322, plus all promissory notes inuring to his benefit, and assessed a third-tier statutory penalty against Sylver in the amount of $120,000. On appeal, Sylver, contends that the district court abused its discretion at trial by excluding certain documents proffered by Sylver, and by overruling Sylver's objections to the Securities and Exchange Commission' (SEC's) summary exhibits and testimony. Sylver also challenges the district court's imposition of a permanent officer and director bar, disgorgement, and third-tier statutory penalties.

We find the district court did not abuse its discretion by excluding certain documents proffered by Sylver at trial or by denying Sylver's related motion for a new trial. The documents were excluded by the district court because Sylver failed to timely respond to discovery requests by the SEC. Whether the SEC was in possession of the excluded documents prior to its motion to exclude the documents is irrelevant. Moreover, none of the documents proffered by Sylver were newly discovered, and all of them were in his possession well in advance of trial.

We also find that the testimony of SEC Staff Accountant Ann C. Romero was properly admitted into evidence by the district court as summary testimony within the meaning of Rule 1006 of the Federal Rules of evidence. Romero's testimony was presented "in the form of a chart, summary, or calculation." Fed R. Evid. 1006. It involved the organization and presentation of voluminous financial records, not the application of interpretive expertise to financial records. Additionally the information contained in Romero's summaries was available to Sylver during discovery. The district court also did not abuse its discretion with regard to a continuance: the court offered Sylver's counsel more time but he did not accept it.

Lastly, we find the district court did not abuse its discretion by permanently barring Sylver from being an officer and director of a publicly held corporation, ordering Sylver to disgorge his gains and promissory notes, and ordering Sylver to pay a third-tier penalty. The evidence demonstrated that Sylver had taken sums of at least the amount the district court ordered him to disgorge, and there is no question that Sylver was unjustly enriched by his numerous violations of the securities laws. SEC v. First Pac. Bancorp , 142 F.3d 1186, 1191 (9th Cir. 1998)

The district court also acted well within its power when it assessed a third-tier penalty against Sylver. In accordance with section 20(d) of the Securities Act, the district court found that Sylver had engaged in fraud, deceit, and manipulation in deliberate disregard of a regulatory requirement, and that his violation resulted in "substantial losses to other persons." 15 U.S.C. § 77t(d)(2)(C). The district court's decision was supported by ample evidence. (1)

Given Sylver's abuses, which have been well documented in the record, the district court also acted within its discretion when it imposed a permanent officer or director bar upon Sylver pursuant to 15 U.S.C. § 78u(d)(2). A district court has substantial discretion when deciding whether to impose an officer or director bar. First Pac. Bancorp., 142 F.3d at 1193. In Sylver's case, the district court offered a host of legitimate reasons why Sylver was substantially unfit to serve as an officer or director of a publicly held corporation.

For the foregoing reasons, we AFFIRM the district court except as modified by footnote 1.

(1) Although not contested by Sylver, the SEC notes that the third-tier penalty amount of $120,000 reflects the inflation adjustment prescribed by regulation for violations occurring after February 2, 2001. Because Sylver's violations occurred before February 2, 2001, however, the applicable inflation-adjusted amount should be $110,000. See 17 C.F.R. § 201.1001 & tbl. I. Accordingly, we correct this error and lower Sylver's third-tier penalty amount to $110,000. We also commend the government for noting the discrepancy.

*This disposition is not appropriate for publication and may not be cited to or by the courts of this circuit except as provided by Ninth Circuit Rule 36-3

The Honorable Donald P. Lay, Senior United States Circuit Judge for he Eighth Circuit, sitting by designation.

Michael A. Sylver, the president and chief executive officer of Amazon Natural Treasures, Inc., appeals the order and judgment of the United States District Court for the District of Nevada. The district court imposed a permanent officer or director bar upon Sylver, ordered Sylver to disgorge a total of $232,322, plus all promissory notes inuring to his benefit, and assessed a third-tier statutory penalty against Sylver in the amount of $120,000. On appeal, Sylver, contends that the district court abused its discretion at trial by excluding certain documents proffered by Sylver, and by overruling Sylver's objections to the Securities and Exchange Commission' (SEC's) summary exhibits and testimony. Sylver also challenges the district court's imposition of a permanent officer and director bar, disgorgement, and third-tier statutory penalties.

We find the district court did not abuse its discretion by excluding certain documents proffered by Sylver at trial or by denying Sylver's related motion for a new trial. The documents were excluded by the district court because Sylver failed to timely respond to discovery requests by the SEC. Whether the SEC was in possession of the excluded documents prior to its motion to exclude the documents is irrelevant. Moreover, none of the documents proffered by Sylver were newly discovered, and all of them were in his possession well in advance of trial.

We also find that the testimony of SEC Staff Accountant Ann C. Romero was properly admitted into evidence by the district court as summary testimony within the meaning of Rule 1006 of the Federal Rules of evidence. Romero's testimony was presented "in the form of a chart, summary, or calculation." Fed R. Evid. 1006. It involved the organization and presentation of voluminous financial records, not the application of interpretive expertise to financial records. Additionally the information contained in Romero's summaries was available to Sylver during discovery. The district court also did not abuse its discretion with regard to a continuance: the court offered Sylver's counsel more time but he did not accept it.

Lastly, we find the district court did not abuse its discretion by permanently barring Sylver from being an officer and director of a publicly held corporation, ordering Sylver to disgorge his gains and promissory notes, and ordering Sylver to pay a third-tier penalty. The evidence demonstrated that Sylver had taken sums of at least the amount the district court ordered him to disgorge, and there is no question that Sylver was unjustly enriched by his numerous violations of the securities laws. SEC v. First Pac. Bancorp , 142 F.3d 1186, 1191 (9th Cir. 1998)

The district court also acted well within its power when it assessed a third-tier penalty against Sylver. In accordance with section 20(d) of the Securities Act, the district court found that Sylver had engaged in fraud, deceit, and manipulation in deliberate disregard of a regulatory requirement, and that his violation resulted in "substantial losses to other persons." 15 U.S.C. § 77t(d)(2)(C). The district court's decision was supported by ample evidence. (1)

In Sylver's case, the district court offered a host of legitimate reasons why Sylver was substantially unfit to serve as an officer or director of a publicly held corporation.

For the foregoing reasons, we AFFIRM the district court except as modified by footnote 1.

(1) Although not contested by Sylver, the SEC notes that the third-tier penalty amount of $120,000 reflects the inflation adjustment prescribed by regulation for violations occurring after February 2, 2001. IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that Defendant Michael A. Sylver disgorge the following : 1) $200,000.00 received form checking and cash accounts of the corporation; 2) $200,000 received as goods and services through the improper use of corporate credit cards; and3) all promissory notes or other claims of loans in his name or inuring to his benefit, against the corporation.
June 11, 2003

Lance Wilson Clerk.
By Deputy Clerk, "s/ Kandy Sappozzi".

The court notes that there have heretofore been entered orders, pursuant to documents labeled as Consent and Undertaking, of Michael A. Sylver and Amazon Natural Treasures.com, formerly known as Amazon Natural Treasures, Inc.
Those orders are hereby incorporated into this court's judgment of the case and become part of this judgment.
One. Officer and Director Bar.

It is the decision and judgment of this court that the defendant Michael A. Sylver shall, and is hereby, permanently barred from serving as an officer or director of any publicly-held corporation.

Even if the court believed all the testimony of Mr. Sylver, which it most certainly does not, it would still be compelled to find him substantially unfit to be an officer or director of a publicly-held corporation and not only to bar Mr. Sylver, but to bar him permanently from exercising authority over a publicly-held corporation as a director or an officer.
The reason for this bar is summed up in Mr. Sylver's own testimony when he declared yesterday, "I am the company". His actions, viewed in the light most favorable to him, clearly show that he considered this his company not the company of the shareholders. It was his to do with as he liked. It was his to use for his own purposes. The evidence is clear that he ran it for his benefit.

But the court does not believe the vast majority of the testimony and claims of Mr. Sylver. It finds incredible his attempted explanations and justifications. Unfortunately for him, the documents created to prove one theory of the justification were contradicted by him as he tried to prove alternative justifications.

I will not reiterate all the reason for this decision. The evidence speaks for itself, when considered in the light of his lack of credibility. Plaintiff's counsel in their closing argument provided a litany of the reasons Mr. Sylver cannot be trusted to run or exercise control over a public held corporation; I adopt that list. His testimony is contradicted by and flies in the face of the essentially corroborated testimony of the other witnesses.

No .2 Civil Penalties

The Securities and Exchange Commission seeks the third-tier civil penalties, which required, one, fraud, deceit, manipulation, or deliberative or reckless disregard of a regulatory requirement. These requirements are in the alternative, but the court is of the opinion that the evidence shows Mr. Sylver guilty of each. It also requires, too, a finding of a significant risk of substantial losses to other persons. There is not only a significant risk shown, but there is adequate evidence of actual losses to other persons.

While the court finds that Mr. Sylver has violated the relevant statues, it's unable to determine whether these actions are one large, on-going violation or multitude of violations. If a multitude, the court is unable to determine how many discrete violations there are. However, the court notes that in the Consent and Undertaking of Michael A. Sylver, he agrees that he, "shall not raise as a defense that he is not liable for the payment of disgorgement or penalties because he did not violate one or more provisions of the Securities Act or Exchange Act". That's noted in the Consent, page 4.

Furthermore, inasmuch as the court will order disgorgement, it has no desire to doubly penalize Mr. Sylver for his actions. Accordingly, it will assess the statutory amount rather that a calculation based on amounts of pecuniary gain. Accordingly, it is the decision and judgment of this court that defendant Michael A. Sylver pay a third-tier penalty in the amount of $120,000.

3. Disgorgement.

The evidence shows hundreds of thousands of dollars in money and property have been taken out of this company by Michael A. Sylver through the deceptive and manipulative use of bank accounts, cash accounts, credit cards, and other means. The court is convinced of Mr. Sylver's accounting of monies representing transfers between corporate accounts. The evidence also shows there were other sums which did not inure to Mr. Sylver's benefit.

His explanations are patently false or unbelievable. Only by way of example, the court notes the claims of vast amounts of cash flowing through the petty cash accounts and checks made out to cash and endorsed by Mr. Sylver, or checks actually made out to and endorsed by Mr. Sylver were going for construction, when the records show hundreds of thousands of dollars going to various entities through checks or credit cards for the materials and the construction workers, and the construction workers were actually corporate employees duly receiving their wages through payroll accounts.

Furthermore, the court finds the tale of opulence demanded by the absent Loricchios as justification for the American Express credit card charges patently unbelievable, particularly in light of the opulent tastes of Mr. Sylver demonstrated by the company purchasing or leasing him a Jaguar and the opulence and appointment of his office. Considering that Mr. Sylver had no bank accounts or other source of income, except for claimed periodic and minimal assistance from his family, and the nature of some of the charges, the court is of the opinion that at least half of those charges for personal expenses must be attributed to his personal living expenses.

Finally, using promissory notes created – for the most part without benefit of evidence or legitimate corporate resolution – which were never seen or disclosed to anyone else, including the accounting personnel or outside accountants or independent auditors, Mr. Sylver attempted to justify money owed or received or received for personal loans he made to the company, or representing wages, salary, or other compensation he decided was due and owing, notwithstanding he was making representations to the Securities and Exchange Commission and to the public that the officers and directors, and he particularly, were not taking any compensation. Even the one so-called loan of something over $100,000, never seemed to be reduced by much although he admits taking $29,000 in payment against that so-called loan. The court finds these "loans" illegitimate, and further evidence of Mr. Sylver's belief that this was his company to do with as he pleases.

It is the decision and judgment of the court that the defendant Michael Sylver disgorge the following: One. $200,000 received from checking and cash accounts from the corporation.
